THE HOME CIRCLE.

THE THOMPSON FAMILY.

IN HUNTINGTON.

Having been invited to contribute anything that might add to the interest of your Homegathering, I send an account of my grandparents and of the founding of the Thompson homestead on the east side of the Center. I include also an account of those who went out from its sheltering fold to engage in the active auties of life.

engage in the active outles of life.

Abram Thompson, my mother's father, was born in Stratford but was a resident of Ripton in '76. He was then 20 years old and had learned the trade of a carpenter. He responded promptly to the call for troops, walking to the place of rendezvous in this State and then on to join the forces gathering near Boston. He served by reinlistments through the War, most of the time under Washington. He was with him through the battles in New Jersey, in the retreat from Long Island and at the evacuation of New York. He told of seeing our soldiers forced by the pursuing British over the blums now called 3rooklyn Heights into the harbor and shot if they did not drown promptly.

A brother who had enlisted with him was killed at the battle of Monmouth. He was promoted to the rank of sargeant and his warrant as such is an interesting specimen of the ornamental penmanship of the time.

About this time he was detailed for duty at West Point. He was the officer in charge of the building of the Chevaux De Freize across the Hudson to prevent the passing of boats up the river. When on furloughs he made his home with an ancestor of the Birdsey family, a relative. Birdsey family, a relative. He had lost both his parents in early boyhood. It was while on these furloughs that he made the acquaintance of my grandmother, Sarah Blackman, residing in the same district, that of Lower White Hills. Their troth was plighted some years before the close of the war but grandfather would not leave the service until its close. When the war was over he returned and they were married by Dr Ely. Then was commenced the building of the salt box house that was to be their home. an was a work of time, for timber for the frame must be cut and bewed and for every nail driven a hole had to be bored to prevent splitting. They seem to have been a well-mated couple, my grandmother being of a well balanced temperament while my grandfather was of an active mentality and a nervous temperament. He had his nerves however so under control as never to lose his balance.

As he died before my mother's mar-riage, I am indebted to a neighbor, Enoch Lane for what I know of his personality. The house completed, the home life that was to be full of so many pleasant memories for three generations, was commenced. To them were born seven children, six sons and one daughter-my mother. Of her brothers, five were older than herself, the one younger dying in ear-iy childhood. The religious character of my grandparents was tersely ex-pressed by Dr Ely as faithful Abram and religious Sarah. The intellectual and religious atmosphere in which the family were reared will be shown by a Word picture which my mother re-

On a winter evening the family gathered around the wide fireplace on which was a biszing fire, in one corner my grandfather, in the center of of our nation.—[Charles T. Morse. the group a stand, with grandmother on one side sewing, and on the other one of her brothers reading aloud, in front of the stand seated on a low stool, my mother, then a little girl, the youngest of the group. Of the boys not reading, Uncle Charles, who had an inventive genius, would work on a perpetual motion machine and the others at making mittens by the hook stitch. Behind the center of the circle was a screen to break the cold draft. When one of the boys tired another would take his place. During the reading remarks commendatory or critical would be made by my grandfather. There was a village library at that time to draw from and Pastor Ely's library was open to them also. The evening reading closed with a portion of Scripture and prayer. Under such home influences it could hardly be otherwise than that the sons should go out from bers of society. My uncles' John and Nathan, were well known to many of you. Of the latter, whose kindness of heart with some eccentricities, were noticeable, let me say that a long period of invalidism lasting from his 18th year until past 30 was thought by Isth year until past 30 was thought by his friends to have contributed to form these peculiarities. My uncle Samuel, the eldest of the sons, followed his father's calling. After a short residence in Huntington he went to New York and engaged in building. At 40, having acquired a moderate competency, he went to Poughkeepste and with his brother Charles commenced the manufacture of sash, doors and blinds, Uncle Charles having invented machinery to use in that business. machinery to use in that business. The machines for planing, moulding and mortising which Uncle invented were the first in use for that purpose, all such work having before been done by hand. While in New York Uncle Samuel was a ruling elder in the Allen Street Presbyterian church, then having a leading position among the churches of the city. At Poughkeepsie he united with the Congregational church, then in its infancy, and helped to build it up to a strong position. Uncle Charles was also a member of that church. It was here that both of them became interested in the cause anti-slavery and of temperance. Uncle Samuel was both by temperament and ability well fitted to be a ment and ability well netted to be a leader, and so became prominent officially and in advocating the cause of both. Uncle Charles, of a more quiet temperament, did much with his pen for the same purpose, for in addition to his inventive talent he had a fine literary ability both in prose and verse. He died at 56 of heart failure, the only one of the sons that reached man-hood that did not live to old age. Incle William was a pioneer in what
